R Shaw Among the happinesses revealed to Tytyl in the Blue Bird, is the Happine-B of Seeing the Stars Rise. This is compared to a god of gold. Following the happinesses came a train of great joys. Chief among these was the Joy of Seeing what is beautiful. Thus in graceful symbol Maeterlinck teaches the secret of pleasure in every-day life the secret of seeing thing. Since the morning stars sang over the wonders of creation, night has blasoned the glory of God and shown forth knowledge. Owing to their mystery, their beauty, their stedfastness, it was especially fitting and typical that a star should have heralded the birth of our Saviour and that He, on Patmos, should have railed himself the Bright and morning star. Knowledge of the stars is possibly the most pleasurable of all learning. They are, said Tigranes, the thoughts of the eternal. Yet the majority of educated and otherwise intelligent men and women go through life without knowing anything about them. The word Astronomy, with its suggestion of mathematical and physical research, frightens the naked-eye student. The names of the individual stars and of the constellations are associated with the heroic and romantic. To know them is to have literature illumined and to feel more keenly their exhilarating and inspiring influence. The September stars have...
