D. 1666 Country villages, in a great measure, afford but few circumstances sufficiently important for historical compilation: indeed, general interest cannot be excited by occurrences of a purely local character; and, therefore, all histories of small places, divested of imaginary incidents, must be strictly confined to the notice of their respective inhabitants. A well-written history of Eyam, a sequestered village in the Peak, would, however, be well worthy of public perusal: this little mountain city being overshadowed by the spirit of old - hallowed by the ever-present shades of the greatest of moral heroes - encircled with an enduring and a dazzling halo of genius, must ever render it a place of sleep, general, and intense interest. The awful circumstance connected with the local history of this romantic village - its desolation by the plague A.D. 1666, - has, from its occurrence, strongly elicited the attention and notice of a great portion of the sympathizing and thinking public. This may be inferred from the calamitous event having at sundry times called into action the highly classic pens of the following elegant authors: - Dr. Meas, Miss Anna Seward, Allan Cunningham, E. Rhodes, S. T. Hall, William and Mary Howitt, S. Roberts, J. Holland, and a many others, who have, in verso and prose, laudably endeavoured to perpetuate the sufferings of a joint number of mortals, who, like Codrus and Curtius, offered themselves up a self-sacrifice for the salvation of their country. Highly commendable as are the brief descriptions of these illustrious authors, on this...
