When a field begins to be unproductive, very few think of doing anything else than to supply it again with a full dressing of barnyard manure. It never occurs to them to inquire whether the diminished fertility may not result from causes which can be removed at little cost by the supply of some particular ingredients which the soil needs. Yet when such is the case, the application of mineral manure is downright extravagance and waste, because we thus supply probably only one or at most but a few of the deficient ingredients which could be furnished more cheaply by some other substance. A few examples will serve to elucidate this. When a black crumbling soil contains no silicic acid, or its humus has become carbonized, or sour, we may indeed supply the needed silicic acid by a dressing of barnyard manure, since it is contained in the straw which is used for litter. A portion of the carbonized humus, also, will be decomposed alike by the ammonia developed, and the more rapid decomposition of the manure which ensues from the stirring and loosening of the soil. - But the remaining ingredients of the manure serve no other present purpose but to increase unnecessarily...
